

The first amendment gives us the right to say things that others might find offensive, and we have the right to listen to things that we find offensive if we want to. If we don't want to listen to things we find offensive, we have the right to turn off out televisions and radios and we don't have to buy the newspaper.